

Fetal Demise

Narrative: Mother presented to her physician office for a labor check with high-risk pregnancy and complaints of diaphoresis, dizziness, and vomiting. Fetal heart tones were unable to be obtained and the patient was sent to the hospital. During initial assessment at the hospital fetal heart tones were still unable to be obtained. Ultrasound confirmed fetal demise. Sudden gush of blood noted, and diagnosis of placental abruption made. Baby was delivered stillborn via Cesarean section.

*Deaths or injuries resulting from the patient's disease, in the absence of a contributing event, occurrence or situation, are not Serious Events.

In this case, the mother presented with the condition. There was no event, occurrence, or situation.